A Turning Point in Mathematical Learning Theory Gordon H. Bower This target article by Estes (1950) sparked the mathematical learning theory movement, which took seriously the goal of predicting quantitative details of behavioral data from standard learning experiments. The central constructs of Estes's theory were stimulus variability, stimulus sampling, and stimulus-response association by ...

More Differentiation: Stationary Points You need to be able to find a stationary point on a curve and decide whether it is a turning point (maximum or minimum) or a point of inflexion. Finding the Stationary Point: Looking at the 3 diagrams above you should be able to see that at each of the points shown the gradient is 0 (i.e. the curve goes flat). In lesson 6 we said that differentiation ...
